Cathryn Fox is a former college football player who is now fighting for equality in the sport. She founded Fair Play End Zone, a non-profit organization that advocates for fair play and equal opportunities for all athletes, regardless of gender.

Fox's journey to football began when she was a young girl growing up in a small town in Texas. She loved playing sports, especially basketball and volleyball. But it wasn't until she saw her brother playing football that she realized she wanted to play too.

"I remember watching my brother play and thinking, 'I want to do that,'" Fox said. "I love the physicality of the game and the teamwork involved."

When Fox was 12 years old, she joined a flag football league. She quickly excelled, becoming one of the best players on the team. In high school, she tried out for the varsity football team, but was told by the coach that she couldn't play because she was a girl.

"I was heartbroken," Fox said. "I had worked so hard to get to that point, and I was being told that I couldn't play just because I was a girl."

Fox refused to give up her dream of playing football. She continued to practice on her own and eventually found a semi-pro women's football team that she could join.

In 2005, Fox made history when she became the first woman to play in a semi-pro football game. She played for the Fort Wayne Fusion in the Women's Professional Football League (WPFL). Fox's performance on the field was impressive, and she helped her team win several games.

Fox's success on the field helped to raise awareness of the issue of gender inequality in football. In 2007, she founded Fair Play End Zone, a non-profit organization that advocates for fair play and equal opportunities for all athletes, regardless of gender.

Fair Play End Zone works to promote Title IX, a federal law that prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in educational programs or activities that receive federal funding. Fox believes that Title IX can be used to ensure that girls and women have the same opportunities to play football as boys and men.

"Title IX is a powerful tool that can be used to level the playing field for girls and women in sports," Fox said. "We need to make sure that all athletes have the same opportunities to succeed, regardless of their gender."

Fair Play End Zone is working to make a difference for girls and women in football. The organization provides resources and support to female athletes, coaches, and administrators. Fair Play End Zone also works to raise awareness of the issue of gender inequality in football and advocate for change.

Fox's work with Fair Play End Zone is helping to make a positive impact on the lives of girls and women in football. She is a role model for young athletes and an inspiration to everyone who believes in equality.
